

The New York Times Explains the Cost of College Tuition

Ez College AID Offers a Solution to the Recent Report from the New York Times that States College Tuition Costs Have Quadrupled

LAGUNA HILLS, CA / ACCESSWIRE / April 14, 2015 / Ez College AID has found a solution for the problem stated in a recent report from the New York Times, entitled, "The Real Reason College Tuition Costs So Much." This report did not leave much hope for families who hope to send a child to college. However, hope can be found.

The New York Times article reflected about costs in tuition that have rose from $11.1 billion in 1960 to $48.2 billion in 1975. It further states that while state funding increased by 390% as of 1980, it did not decrease the cost of tuition, and in fact it increased tuition costs.

The increase of college administrators and exceedingly high salaries is noted, along with the rise in inflation in regard to why it costs so much to attend college today. Despite financial aid, many people are unable to attend college. Many who do are left with exorbitant student loans, $25,000 on average that become a hardship to pay off.

The New York Times article states, "What cannot be defended, however, is the claim that tuition has risen because public funding for higher education has been cut. Despite its ubiquity, this claim flies directly in the face of the facts."

Overall, the "The Real Reason College Tuition Costs So Much" paints a grim picture for hopeful college students throughout the United States. Fortunately, there are options. Ez College AID services are the solutions for those who need to save money on their college tuition costs, regardless of the real reason college tuition costs so much today.

The collection of services offered through EZ College Aid include "The Art of College Cost Planning" Free Savings Report, a free exclusive informative webinar and a variety of additional resources that will dramatically cut tuition costs and reliance on spending so much in student loans. Additional resources can be found at EZCollegeAid.com.

About Ez College AID: With more than twenty years' experience in proper college planning and funding strategies, ez College AID assists students throughout their undergraduate years with choosing a major, board exam test prep, deciding on a college or university, advantageous financial aid negotiations, FAFSA/CSS Profile prep and filing, and maximizing college education financial aid eligibility to receive the maximum amount of grants and scholarships.